What is NADE?

NADE is a professional organization for analysts, medical consultants, support staff, hearings officers, field office representatives, administrators and managers involved in disability determination. Retirees are also welcome!

Our aims are to develop the art and science of disability evaluation, to enhance public awareness about the work we do, and further recognition for disability professionals.

NADE provides training and networking opportunities beyond those available in your local office. NADE even offers a certification program!

NADE testifies regularly before Congress, advocating for legislation that supports fast, efficient, fair disability determinations and the funding to support those processes.

NADE represents the interests and concerns of its front-line employees to the Social Security Administration. If you have an idea about how to improve the disability process, NADE can voice those ideas to people who listen.

NADE conducts an annual training conference, held in a different state each year. This is a fantastic opportunity to learn more about specific medical and psychological conditions, best practices, and the big picture where disability adjudication is concerned. It's also a great chance to meet people who share your job from around the country!

NADE's quarterly publication, The Advocate, keeps you abreast of NADE's various activities and hot topics related to your work.

Your job is difficult. Your job is unique. Few people in the country truly understand what you do.

NADE brings people like you together for mutual support, education and advocacy.
